The Year's Best Australian Fantasy and Horror by Liz Grzyb

Erica Hayes also released the second in her Seven Signs series, Redemption , following fallen angel Japheth and vampire Rose. Michael Pryor continued his young adult magical realism Extraordinaires series with The Subterranean Stratagem. Clan Destine Press published three Australian novels in the fantasy genre this year. Ian Irvine completed his Tainted Realm trilogy with Justice. Fablecroft also re-released the first two volumes of the Mocklore Chronicles, Splashdance Silver and Liquid Gold , as ebooks. Award, the Norma K. Neil Cladingboel released the final novel of his Erebus Equilibrium series, Beloved Sons , through his publishing house, Equilibrium Books. She also self-published Tarnished Knight. Many self-published novels are starting to win awards and being included in shortlists.

In the Sir Julius Vogel Awards shortlist in New Zealand, three out of the six shortlisted novels are self-published, and in the Aurealis Awards in Australia, three of the six book categories included a self-published book, and two awards were won by self-published works. As the information for the introduction was being collated this year, another interesting phenomenon was noted: that a large number of self-published works were listed as published by a company which turned out to be made up of the author. While there obviously continues to be a stigma attached to self-published works for this to occur, it seems that the awards are beginning to reflect more of an open door to non-traditionally published works. Andrea Host was another self-published author who made waves in the awards this year, with her novels Hunting , which was shortlisted in the Aurealis Awards for Best Young Adult Novel, and Bones of the Fair.

Sam J. Ticonderoga Publications took the lead again in the number of single-author collections published this year, edited by Russell B. Sparks was also nominated for Best Artwork in the Ditmars for her cover of this collection, which was nominated for Best Collection in the Aurealis Awards. Even the cover art by Pia Ravenari was nominated for two awards. The story was also shortlisted for Best Novella or Novelette in the Ditmars.

Twelfth Planet Press has continued to produce outstanding boutique collections from big names in Australian speculative fiction. Jay Caselberg released his collection Unnatural Conditions , containing nineteen of his fantasy, horror and science fiction short stories. Fablecroft and Ticonderoga Publications both published two anthologies this year, and each had one reprint and one original anthology. It was nominated for the Aurealis Award for Best Anthology. Stephen C. Editor Julianne Schultz included both fiction and non-fiction pieces centred around the fairy tale idea. The anthology was nominated for an Australian Shadows Award. New Zealander Freya Robertson published her own collection of short stories, Augur and other short stories , which included one story from Chris Robertson.

Tan was also nominated for Best Artist in the Locus Awards. New Zealand continued its involvement with fantasy in TV and film, with the second film in the Hobbit series, The Desolation of Smaug , being made. Dark Matter prints reviews, interviews, and blogs. Aurealis Magazine is available electronically through iTunes and other formats through Smashwords. Aurealis released ten issues in , combining fiction with opinion pieces. Andromeda Spaceways Inflight Magazine released issues 57 and 58 in ASIM is available both electronically and in print through their website. Cosmos Magazine regularly publishes speculative fiction edited by Cat Sparks, both in the print magazine now available as an iPad app and on the website. While these are primarily science fiction, some stories have fantasy elements. Antipodean SF has continued to prolifically publish speculative fiction online, releasing monthly issues. Review of Australian Fiction brings two stories from Australian authors every two weeks, and frequently offers speculative fiction pieces.

New Zealand webzine Novazine from Jacqui Smith brought out six issues in , including short stories, news, reviews and trivia. Perth-based small press publishers Dragonfall Press closed their doors this year, after three years of operations. Their titles are still available through Smashwords, Tomely, and Amazon. Solarwyrn Press, run by Jax Goss and Dominica Malcolm, is another new small press who opened in but produced their first publications in They run in a crowdfunding, cooperative style.

Crowdfunding is still a new area of exploration for Australian publishers and authors, as well as internationally. Vickery; a historical zombie saga set in Haiti. End of Dreams The Immortal Destiny 1 by Kim Faulks opened a dark paranormal series; a young woman and a hard-bitten detective caught in a supernatural war. Richardson self-published Little Red Gem , a comedy paranormal romance about a haunting. Secret Reflection by Jennifer Brassel was published by Escape Publishing; a modern gothic romance between a dashing ghost and a beautiful skeptic. The Beckoning Damnation Books was a return to adult fiction by Paul Collins, with a dark occult horror; a lawyer attempts to prevent his psychic daughter being drawn into a sinister cult. The Dark Lands Valkeryn 2 by Greig Beck, a far future dystopian where the descendents of canines are the dominant species, published by Cohesion Press. Astrid Cooper published Blood Immoral eXtasy Books , a rollicking paranormal with cat shifters and rogue vampires tangling in the city of churches.

Phil Cohen self-published The Stony Streets of Hell ; a child journeyed to the underworld to bring back their parents. Ros Baxter published White Christmas Escape Publishing ; a post-apocalyptic world overrun by ice vampires. S McMullen. This is more like the horror I was after. A weird man has a house with the walls made of ants nests. Had me from start to end. A retold Baba Yaga story based in urban Australian flats. More than a chance meeting. Pretty good. An imprisoned girl in a culturally restrictive society, which reflects a fundamentalist Islamic culture. May offend some but this focuses on liberation and civil liberties. Wonderful story.

Words literally have power in this horror story. May 18, Anthony Panegyres rated it really liked it Shelves: anthology , fiction , spec-fic. Not a review as such - just thought I'd mention a few stories. Plenty of other worthwhile stories too. Spec-fic in Australia is certainly running strong. Nov 02, Nathan rated it really liked it. Took my time with this one. Overall, 4 stars is probably the fairest rating. Subtle, perfectly paced and with a hint of magic, both dark and light. Aug 15, Rivqa rated it really liked it. A good selection from a good year. Jul 19, Ticonderoga Publications rated it it was amazing Shelves: our-books-publications.

Trying to bust a reading slump? No time to sink into a long novel? It was edited by Leigh Blackmore. It is technically preceded by Bill Congreve 's anthology Intimate Armageddons MirrorDanse Books , - however, that volume did not have mass market distribution. Terror Australis the anthology grew from the magazine Terror Australis and drew on the talents of horror writers centred on Sydney's Gargoyle Club Horror Writers and Artists' Society; however it also featured many of Australia's big-name sf and horror writers. Most contributions were original; however a few of the contributions were reprints, mainly from the Australian small press. The quantity of internal artwork featured, designed to showcase horror work in art as well as fiction, made it something of an innovation amongst paperbacks of the time in Australia.

Robert Bloch , author of Psycho , called the volume "a landmark - a monument to the genre". Seven of the included stories have since been reprinted, some several times see below. From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia.
